Setting the Record Straight series- Part 2

Harry Truman and the United Nations

Once upon a time, when average people were just as preoccupied with their own affairs as they are today, a group of dedicated British Socialists hatched an idea that was certain to meet with resistance in America. In many places as in this fair land of ours it still does.

Students of Communism call these plotters Fabians who though they eschewed violence were as revolutionary in their thinking as any member of the Kremlin. Fabians were determined to do away with capitalism. And in its place they would erect collectivism and wealth redistribution.

To affect a radical change of this kind, the Fabians knew that they would have to create a one-world government. Their idea was similar in nature to the type of government Albert Einstein [1879-1955] called for at the conclusion of World War II. The man instrumental in the creation of the atomic bomb bit the hand that fed him which happened to be our hand. Einstein used the free speech afforded him in our republic in order to promote an understanding of economics and social justice that appealed to the Soviets who shunned free market capitalism. Einstein said that had it been necessary he could have gotten along quite well in the U.S.S.R.

Why didn't someone pay his ticket out of America? We could have taken up a collection in the public schools. Every student could have donated a nickel in order to rid us of another one-worlder.

The Fabians had another stooge who could help them, one not fully aware that he was being used. Woodrow Wilson, the 28th president of the United States [1856-1924], swallowed their idea which promised if we formed an international cooperative - calling it the League Nations- that it would put an end to war and everyday would be the first day of Spring.

Wilson wanted to be the 20th century Nimrod of the Tower of Babel.

The President tried to sell the League to Congress only to discover that they would not trespass on U.S. sovereignty. Congress understood that it would be necessary if it became a member of the ill-fated League of Nations that, like its bastard child the United Nations, would prove to be a do-nothing, go-nowhere body that American taxpayers could do without.

After the Second World War the atmosphere changed in America. Politicians were ready to reinterpret the significance and meaning of national sovereignty, anything for a bit of peace. Harry Truman wanted a seat at the U.N. in the way a broker wants a seat on the New York Stock Exchange. President Truman [1884-1972] convinced Congress on the idea that if America joined the United Nations freedom would reign in the future.

Need I tell you, within a few years of his waxing pious and optimistic about the prospect of peace, Americans were dying by the thousands in the snow-covered hills of Korea.

Truman was a liberal which means that he trusted in the goodness of human nature. Liberals are to politics what Pelagius was to theology. Liberals believe if all people are fundamentally bad, so evil that they break alliances, then that would mean that they too must not be good. And in their minds, liberals are good. So they shut their eyes to what is obvious, namely that human nature is self-serving and rapacious. The thing inaccurate with all these international alliances is that they do not take into account the fact that humans are wanton.

Truman failed to review the files of the Americans who were appointed to the planning board of the United Nations. A bus load of Communists, all citizens of this great country of ours, helped shape the U.N. Alger Hiss was there, so also was Harry Dexter White, and they must have felt like mice given entrance into a Wisconsin cheese locker.

San Francisco

While meeting up with all sorts of entertainers in California, my son told me that Tony Bennett impressed him the most. You know he's the guy who left his heart in San Francisco. Something else was left there. America left its integrity in San Francisco when the United Nations took shape in the city by the bay.

Truman, in order to bring the Soviets into the United Nations, sold out the Polish people. If they became U.N. members, the Missouri haberdasher-turned politician would look the other way when the Kremlin strong-armed the Poles to get them to tow the Soviet line.

Talk about duplicity!

Truman knew who to send to Moscow to broker a deal that would need the cover of darkness. The man representing the oval office was a New Dealer by the name of Harry Hopkins [1890-1946].

Hopkins cooked up a deal with the Soviets that was a gastronomic disaster, like some of the meals I prepared for my kids when a single parent; they called them Greek tragedies. Rose Martin, author of the Fabian Freeway, hinted at the idea that Hopkins gave away the shop, and he is the Judas Iscariot of American history. The Soviets made a patsy out of Truman and Hopkins provided the recipe.

Exit Strategy

Departing from the U.N. would be easy; just stop paying dues. The U.N. is nothing more than a house of cards, and we are paying the mortgage. Most of the members are squatters whom we know would not want to party with us no matter what we did for them.

We must withdraw from the United Nations. It is a bridge to a one-world government, a new world order. Conceptually it is no different than the League of Nations.

Ever yours,
